

Protest against the installation of outdoor mobile base stations

Overview

Does Air Force have a protest area?

The Air Force has granted an easement over areas of the Base, so that two public highways traverse the Base. One highway has an adjacent area designated for peaceful protests. The Base commander enacted rules to control the protest area and issued an advisory that anyone who fails to adhere to those policies may be barred from entering the Base.

What if you don't adhere to the protest area policies?

The Base commander has enacted several restrictions to control the protest area and has issued an advisory stating that anyone who fails to adhere to the protest area policies may be barred from entering the Base. Petitioner Apel was barred from the Base for trespassing and vandalism, but continued to enter the protest area.

Is the protest area outside the Vandenberg installation legal?

First, to say that the highway and protest area are “outside” the Vandenberg installation is not a legal argument; it simply assumes the conclusion.

Is the protest area uncontrolled?

As for Apel’s claim that the protest area specifically is uncontrolled, the record is conclusively to the contrary. The Base commander “at all times has retained authority and control over who may access the installation,” including the protest area. Buck Memorandum Re: Protest Activity, App. 58.

Why is the Air Force allowing peaceful protests at Air Force base?

The Air Force has granted an easement over two areas of the Base, with the result that two public highways traverse the Base. Adjacent to one of those highways is an area that the Government has designated for peaceful protests.
